I think that no matter what we do there is going to be an initial resistance to change and learning a new system but in the long term, I think Illuminate would make many jobs easier. I think we are just learning all about Aeries, teacher's have just learned to use it on line and to have to start a whole new problem might be frustrating. Traing would have to be sooner for Year round schools as well. I would like to see more of the Master Scheduling process. I was quite impressed that the company spent time learning the process with Pearson and translated that into greater ease for building the ...

Other comments:

After seeing the presentation, I believe our English and Social Studies departments, who have a substantial number of common assessments on EduSoft, should have had representatives there. At the very least, they should be contacted and offered some form of explanation about what will be involved in making this move. Secondly, having been a part of the evaluation team that selected EduSoft, I find myself skeptical about the true usefulness of Illuminate's Test Question Bank. I believe it is important for teachers to have an opportunity to evaluate the ease of creating the Assessments we have created in EduSoft using Illuminate, before a final decision to proceed is made. As a counselor, I liked the ease of scheduling, the master schedule builder, and the fact that students can pre enroll themselves online! I am concerned how Illuminate and my EDU website and gradebook will integrate. I liked that the company was open to improvements and moving forward with common core and technology. They are looking for a solution for using the ipad camera for grading. I think the simple fact that they are available by phone for help is really nice for teachers. Many times we have a quick question and would love to be able to call for help. I liked the feature where you could view multiple assessments and look for trends among students. The company seems ambitious and knowledgeable. If the decision is made please have it ready by early July so year round schools can get started right away. I know Wayne Cole is expensive, but for some of our less tech savvy teachers I think that in-person support may be crucial to whether they use it or not. Maybe a full time consultant isn't necessary, but a district tech that's trained on the ins and outs would be nice. As teachers the thought of trying to find time to get on the phone and call tech support is sort of overwhelming. Other than that I like the idea of having student info, taking attendance/lunch count, and data and assessment all in the same place. If the district makes the decision in time it might be nice to have a training on this during our June optional professional development days. I thought that this data and assessment piece was light years better than edusoft. I've watched my colleagues struggle with edusoft- the scanner, the reports, finding assessments, finding reports( in very illogical places), and I think the illuminate solves many of these problems. Please continue to look into it, I think it would be worth the switch. Also, I don't think training time will be a big issue to get it going, and then we can train as needed, or use the videos on the site. I liked the presentation and am excited about the prospect of using illuminate. It seems much more thorough and easier to use in the classroom. I especially like the idea of using the doc camera and/or ipad to scan in answer sheets. Go for it. Hopefully you will get consensus. It is an easy transfer for secondary. Elementary is the tough sell. Offer them support, and deliver. Assign Wayne the job of transferring files from Edusoft. Get us the Promo when you get the chance - harness the early adopters. Learning new software is always burdensome. Make sure you meet the emotional needs of the new users. We have CommonCore, EDU, and now this on our plates. That's a lot. It is a good progression, but some will buckle. I feel that the ease of use/tech support is the number one benefit of moving to Illuminate. Edusoft is very clunky and hard to navigate to your specific report. The dashboard on Illuminate is customizable to each user, and the amount of data compiled is staggering. It is also nice to see how students are doing in other courses, which is not available in Edusoft as far as I know. Having 1 system for student database and assessment would be great.
